LETTER: Is it really a million in 10?

Dear Editor:

So our population in Metro Vancouver is going to grow by a million in the next decade. Says who?

The municipal councils who continually approve development beyond what the infrastructure can handle? Or is it the developers who make money but don't live in their small units or battle traffic during peak times?

Stop the outrageous speed of development in Metro. And stop telling us that it is fact that a million people will move here in the next 10 years. Every development proposal must stand alone, and they do not all need to be approved. Talk to your municipal politicians.
