Scott Whittle, North Vancouver: “In the right place, possibly down by the (North Vancouver) waterfront.”

The BCLC figures there’s $40 million to be made servicing North Shore gamblers afflicted with bridge-phobia.

A casino would allow our local card sharks, whales, blackjack counters and down-and-outers to try outwitting the “tax on stupidity” without a two-zone bus pass.

There could be $2 million a year for the lucky municipality that snaps up a gambling hall, but will any mayor go for it?

Remember, if you can’t figure out which mayor is the sucker during the first round of community consultation, then your mayor is the sucker.
